

12/26/2012

I, LaQuette Milner, declare that the following statements are true.

I've known Jeff for the last 2 1/2 years. We meet through our daughters' sports involvement at the local recreation center, around July 2010; and from then, we've been close friends ever since. From the moment I met Jeff, I could tell that he was all about his kids; his work, his commitment, his loyalty, his lifestyle were all elements of him being a good father; a great dad.

There were countless days and nights, where my daughters, Jayda and Jayla, and I would spend time with Jeff, his son; Ben, and/or his daughters; Taylor and Kennedy. Whether it was a movie night, a day at Magic Mountain, hanging out at the beach, or our recent 4th of July trip to Big Bear Lake, we all had a good time. We also came over to Jeff's house on November 30, 2012, to celebrate Ben's birthday; everyone, including Ben, was enjoying themselves, eating cake and having fun.

I've never witnessed Jeff drinking alcohol, using drugs, disciplining his children with any type of corporate punishment, or doing anything of such measures. His children never expressed any type of fear of him; and, neither did my own children.

I felt so comfortable with my own daughters being around Jeff that I would allow them to walk over to his house after school, spend the night when his daughters were in town, and hang out with him and his son and/or daughters to go to various functions. Not once did I ever hear anything from my daughters about Jeff drinking alcohol, doing drugs, or mistreating his kids.

I see Jeff as a father who cares about his kids' future; he would have them spend time reading a book, he had them enrolled in an academic summer school, he would make sure they ate properly because they're athletes, and made sure they honored and respected God. Whenever his children would be with me, Jeff would also express his caring spirit for them by calling to check up on them, and making sure they had a ride to and from their various functions.

Out of the countless hours that I've spent around Jeff and his children, averaging about 3 to 4 days out of the week, I've never once seen him put his children in danger, cause danger for them to be in, or even use any type of corporate punishment to discipline them. If his children were to do anything wrong, he would talk to them about the mistake or bad choices they made; I've even seen him send his children to their rooms to think about what they've done. But, that's it; nothing more, nothing less.

Again, after spending countless hours, days, nights around Jeff and his children, I've only witnessed Jeff as being a good father; great dad.

Sincerely,

LaQuette Milner
